It covers nightmare scenarios such as resuscitation and head injuries, choking and seizures, burns, bleeding and poisoning, asthma attacks, foreign objects and fractures. It meets Ofsted's requirements as well as the requirements of the DFES Approved Carers Scheme and is also suitable for those working towards an NVQ in Childcare and Education. *The two-day course runs on various dates in 2008 at a cost of £100 + VAT. A&U NEWS

WHAT TYPE OF PARENT ARE YOU?

The Trinny and Susannah of modern-day parenting, Karen Doherty and Georgia Coleridge have come up with seven types of parenting. Their book teaches parents to identify their own natural style of parenting and to borrow techniques from other types. So whether you are a naturally 'physical parent' who tends to think that all family troubles are fixed by taking your kids to the park and eating healthy meals or a 'tuned-in parent' who excels at processing your kids' feelings, the book teaches you that there is lots to learn from every type of positive parenting.

EMERGENCY CHILDCARE

A recent working mothers' report revealed that having a faulty alarm clock was a more acceptable excuse for arriving late for work than childcare problems. Despite the Government's promise to encourage a better work/life balance, 66% of working mothers said pushing for flexible working would have a negative effect on their careers. So having a number that you can call on in an emergency, who can provide childcare at short notice, could be a godsend. Emergency Childcare works closely with Tinies Nanny agency and nurseries across London. It is a good idea to pre-register. There will usually be a nanny in place within the hour. All candidates are police-checked and vetted but be sure to follow the same instincts you would normally use when employing a nanny.
